* “Nancy uplifts each and every one of her students, and generously provides them necessary learning and coping tools.” - Emma Schaefer, colleague

NANCY MURRAY

Throughout her career Nancy Murray has used the creative word to comfort and educate others. By sharing her story through literary and visual arts, she provides motivation and encouragement to students who may be looking for similar outlets. Nancy has produced plays which initiated healing community conversations around the difficult topics of date rape, depression, and self-harm.

She is a professor at the Community College of Baltimore County where she creates inclusive and inspiring teaching units. She is currently working on a 2D and 3D art project called “Poetic Portraits” where poetry strategically supports the visual representation of her subjects.

Her personal mission statement, “...to use my experience, insight, and creativity to help others find strength and faith in themselves,” has been displayed in her every work space for the past 40 years.
